HERE WE ARE, seven victims, all modestly tugging at our forelocks. To whom shall we inscribe this little book? For whom is it intended? We can not hope to startle the world, and would not if we could. It is not designed for the display of editorial ingenuity or literary skill. It is merely meant for an oasis in this, our hardest and dullest term. It is also a means of proving our "visibility," by lifting off the bushel that has been hiding our light here on the Hill.

The "HAMILTONIAN" aims to remove from outsiders any false impressions in regard to our college life, by showing them the reality, and is intended as a book of reference for our Alumni and a souvenir that will recall a portion of their college days. In this work we have tried to reproduce the most interesting features of the past year for the edification of the students and every Hamilton man. To this end additions have been made to the old material, and lists of prize men in new departments have been added. Though the Centennial year has passed, yet the Milennium has not come; therefore we are still restricted in the freedom of our press. There is a happy Faculty which insinuates itself and admonishes us that "discretion is the better part of valor." Hence, this publication will contain only matter of interest with no suggestions.

When Spring comes, our Athletic Organizations will for another season resume their accustomed duties, and from the present prospects the sports in our College will be livelier than ever. Our base ball nine has made a good record, and promises a better. Resolutions have been passed to the effect that our boat club be disbanded, the boats sold and the proceeds used in the purchase of base-ball suits, and the improvement of our ball ground. Foot ball is still the polite way of crippling each other, and beautifying the shrubbery on the Campus. When the weather permits the College ball will undoubtedly be chased as vigorously as ever by energetic Under classmen. The glee club is as fine as usual. If rushes and rows are any criterion, the College is thoroughly wide awake. The sliding has been prime, though with its accustomed pull-backs. Winter has monotonously "dragged its slow length along, bar'n' a few mear accidents.

Great crises have rendered this an eventful year in as well as out of College. While the reflection of hard times is seen here, as elsewhere, our Alumni and friends have stood by us nobly, and among the liberal donations to the College, two of the last and much needed, were a rhetorical library and a tower clock. While others have helped us, we have also helped ourselves, and for a second time the Chapel Bell "rang out for old Hamilton."

And now reader, whoever you are, in retiring from public life we will present you our compliments. If you are pleased with the performance, think more of old "Hamilton" and all her interests. If this little book has any merits, may they add to her glory, but let its faults be imputed to ourselves. Thanking all, who have in any way aided us, we would most cordially welcome '79 to the succeeding duties of editorship, and with a bow and scrape bid you all farewell.

Τῷ ὁμονοεῖν κρατοῦμεν.

A LITTLE longer, and '77's college life will be only a memory. A four years' record will be closed; the busy pen will cease making history; and the book of fact and prophecy will become a book of suggestion and reverie. A curious volume, and a valuable one is this, which we are soon to lay away upon our mental book shelves. One hardly knows how to classify it. Shall we put it among the romances; among the gilt-edged, lace-leaved fictions of our lives? For, surely, there is romance somewhere hidden among its pages. A stray flirtation, a smile, a glove, the memory of moonlight coasting—college life is not all work. Shall we call it theology—stand it up shoulder to shoulder with the righteous old divines who have haunted us from Freshmanhood,—the sainted Barnes, the devout Jacobus, the pious Bush, the revered Butler, the inspired Hickok? For, indeed, there is a sober side; and the book has a moral, though we will not draw it. Shall we stow it away in the metaphysical corner of our library, where the dust is thickest and the cobwebs biggest, with Hamilton and Mill, with Porter and Comte, with the history of searches after the unfindable, and the measurements of dives after the unfathomable? For certainly there is metaphysics in the book; ideas which no man can understand, effects for which no cause exists, problems and knots and mysteries. It is all of these: romance, theology, metaphysics, and yet—it is none of them. Let us put the finished book among the poems. Its words are clear and musical. Its story is a noble and a lofty one. Few are the discords, faint the jarring notes: it is a perfect harmony, worthy the old tone-masters. It can boast of chivalry enough, and deeds of prowess, of victories in hard fought battle, of steady aim and unturned purpose, of final triumph, and a well-earned laurel. It is set to the music of brave hearts. From this four-volumed poem, this class history in rhyme and tune, may echoes follow us always, making the memory of our past more pleasant and the thought of our future brighter and more hopeful.

Δυσπόρων οὐδαμῶς ἡσσητέα.

THE ancient poets sang of a Golden Mean, a happy medium ground, where conflicting views and distorted extremes were blended in the harmony of truth. Above the valley's smoke and fog, below the mist-clouds of the higher peaks, is the altitude of clearest vision.

Such is the quiet plane of Junior existence. At once the pleasantest and busiest of the college course, it is the typical period of student life. The free, unthinking carelessness of underclassman years, gives place to earnest endeavor, as yet unmarred by the vague, uncomfortable restlessness that ever heralds approaching change. Behind us, the rows and excitements of the former period are fading from our memory: before us, Senior responsibilities are still in the unknown future. We close the record of the one, and look forward to the other, without regret, only hoping that the future may be, as has been the past, honorable and happy.

In the mean time, the present hour calls for serious and unremitting effort. Junior year must be no dreamy slumber, or boisterous play-spell. Upon the faithful performance of its duties, may depend all coming success. Already the oncrowding weeks warn us that the days of our preparation here are limited, the drill will soon be over, and we must march forth into action. May the approaching trial find us ready, waiting with stout hearts and burnished armor. Then with unyielding determination may each difficulty be encountered, until the end shall hail us, unconquerable and triumphant; and remove our names from the list of active membership, to place them upon a higher roll, among the true stelligerents of Hamilton.

"Πρόσω ἀεί."

WITH MODEST bow, once again we greet you, gracious reader: Not however as unaccountable Fresh. but as manly, responsible Sophomores. Picture to yourself a scene in the early Fall of 1876. The Campus is in its loveliest autumnal dress. The renowned "Comet-bagger," who has forgiven our attempts at Asteriod hunting, stands in his tower and holds "Old Sol" just on the verge of that silvery cloud. There! Now the artist can do us full justice! We feel the admiring glance of the fair ones as they eagerly look upon us. Behold us as we stand in view, fifty in number, even with becoming beavers and fancy canes. Such are Hamilton's Sophomores: not a quiet company of studious, long-faced bookworms, but ideal Sophomores; "a sleep-disturbing, door-smashing, chapel-rowing, water throwing, fresh-hooting, fun-loving crew, the life of the College, and the terror of the Faculty." We do not boast of our prowess and achievements, but like Edmund Burke, we would "take to ourselves some degree of honest pride "in the faithful performance of our duties." Our proteges were extremely fresh, and needed careful attention. At first, they were so timorous, and in such awe of the terrible Sophs. that with few exceptions they did not dare room on the hill. How well we remember those nights! We felt lonely roaming the Campus and the halls in search of some stray lamb. But the tender flock came back gradually, and we punished them the more severely for their timidity. The more faint hearted we suspended in turn to the chapel vane, or from the highest hall windows. The refractory were made to dance in the light of the blazing torch, to the tune of "Γῆς Ἄττης." But we have not space to recount the lessons, many and timely, which they received: how those, who "did not believe in taking drill," were placed on the table in our political meetings and induced to speak in the most approved manner: how as a class they were ducked on the chapel steps; how in every particular they have been trained till they recognize their superiors with becoming humility. So now we have every reason to believe that before the close of the year, they may show some semblance of manhood, and may be "capable of thought."

In respect to our standing and influence in college, we need only point to our motto "Πρόσω Ἀεί," which is truly indicative of our character. But as we give attention to coördinates, asymptotes, and conjugates of Analytics, and to glowing figures of Rhetoric, we still find time for mirth and song, realizing that these Sophomore days and joys, the happiest, merriest sunniest of all in our College life, aredarting rapidly by and will soon be

> "Gone—like a meteor that o'er head
> Suddenly shines and ere we've said
> 'Look! look, how beautiful!' 'tis fled!"

Ὀγοήκοντα καὶ προσηκοντα.

WE MEN of "'80" send jubilant greeting and best of good wishes to whom this may come. Cheerfully we acknowledge our humble position, but are pleased to know that we enter upon our course with the independent and resolute spirit of '76." Few in numbers, we trust that this deficiency is fully satisfied by quality and energy. When we entered these classic walls, we were actuated by two motives, preserverance and fidelity, which have never been lost sight of in all our undertakings and conquests. As we glance back over our short and eventful career at Hamilton, we recall with pride achievements which have excited the envy of our opponents, and caused opposition to console itself with what might have been. We have triumphantly witnessed untimely exits, disorderly routs of the enemy, who have often sought close sympathy with mother earth; and more than once we have heard the midnight howls, "fire" and "murder!" In fact, we have punctuated the whole history of one Class with humility and obedience.

Other classes have gone forth having distinguished themselves on the role of honor, so shall we. Possessing a strong individuality as a Class, the ties of friendship are strengthened as we look forward to the associations of four long years. And when our four year's course is ended, and the curtain falls, may we look back and truly say, that we have contributed to the glory of our Alma Mater.
